Centor Integrated Doors

Connect with the magical outdoors

There's nothing more beautiful than the natural world and nowhere more special than the part of it that you call home. When you connect to the beautiful world outside your door, you live better, every day. By bringing light, air and outside views indoors, you can enjoy all that nature has to offer, spending more time outdoors, living beyond walls.

Imagine feeling the cool breeze on a summer day. Watching the rainfall from your cosy couch with a cup of tea. Taking time to admire the sunset with friends and family. It's a wonderful way to live and share the magic all around you.

But sometimes inviting the outside in can come with compromises. Harsh sunlight intrudes. Privacy is elusive. Cold air creeps in. Insects invade. In times like these, you want control over your environment.

We believe you should have the beauty of the outdoors in your home and the control you need for maximum comfort and enjoyment. We want you to be able to create true inside-outside living, without the compromises. Once you take in the beauty that surrounds you while controlling elements of the outdoors, you keep your home life in harmony.

So you feel even more at home in your beautiful world.

Inside-outside living without compromise

One door does it all

True inside-outside living is about choice, balance and control. Now, you can master it all to achieve the perfect balance between your home and nature. Encourage airflow. Keep insect intruders out. Control harsh sunlight. And all through even your largest window and door openings without compromising the sleekness of your architecture. The key is the world's first integrated doors.

Unlike traditional patio doors with awkward screens and heavy drapes, Centor Integrated Doors feature a vanishing screen and shade that disappear into the doorframe. That gives you a clean interior design and keeps screens and shades protected from dust and dirt.

In this way, you get a complete solution that frames your view, instead of diminishing it, yet provides you with the privacy and protection you need, when you want it.

Grand openings, perfectly controlled

To create the best inside-outside living, you need to open your home to the beauty that surrounds you by using large windows and doors. Centor Integrated Doors make that possible in a whole new way. They can span openings up to nearly six metres wide so you can maximise your view. And you can control even the largest openings perfectly with screens and shades that vanish completely when you don't need them. Block the light or simply filter it out by choosing from our shade options to create the perfect mood and the perfect amount of privacy. This is inside-outside living at its finest.

Beautiful doors, designed for people

Effortless movement

Centor Integrated Doors are a delight to use, opening and closing with fingertip performance. Our patent-pending hardware is simple, functional, and designed to be out of sight so it doesn't detract from your view. Exclusive to Centor, the groundbreaking AutoLatch™ on our folding and french doors let you close and latch even the tallest doors with a single hand movement, making them effortless to operate.

Meanwhile, child-friendly screens and shades operate beautifully from any height so even younger family members can use them. The tip of a finger is all it takes to slide the screen or shade open. And they stay in any position without retracting, allowing easy transitions from inside to outside – which is especially helpful when you're carrying the refreshments while entertaining.

A simple, clean look

In designing Centor Integrated Doors, we considered everything down to the last detail. They feature slim, symmetrical panels and hardware hidden from sight. We've removed all the visual distractions so nothing stands in the way of your view. Plus, integrated screens and shades are free of pleats, joins or folds for the simplest, clearest opening to keep your architecture stylishly sleek.

Effortless inside-outside living

To build her family's dream home, Jody Shadforth set out to renovate a tired brick home in a prime waterfront location on Queensland's Sunshine Coast. While she had built a new home before, this was Jody's first renovation project so she took a hands-on approach.

Her husband, Ray, an engineer, employed his brother Tony, a builder, to transform the 30-year-old home over eight months, removing walls and changing the floor plan. A new key feature: large windows and doors to capitalise on light and waterfront views. The easterly home has nine sets of integrated doors installed in the living, dining and bedroom areas. "When you look outside with the doors open there's nothing blocking your view... that flow from inside to outside is effortless," says Jody.

With harsh sunlight reflecting off the water in the mornings, the integrated shades have been crucial. "We had to wear sunglasses to butter a piece of toast," Jody laughs. With the light-filtering shades installed, glare is controlled all day long. "The integrated blinds and screens are amazing," she adds.

Meanwhile, using the blackout fabric in the children's rooms has afforded Ray and Jody extra sleep. "It's funny to say that a door, a screen and a blind can improve your quality of life but it can. And you feel very proud because they look so beautiful," says Jody. And she could not be happier. "It's working fabulously. I'm not just saying that. They're beautiful doors. You can feel the quality when you open them," she says.

As they unveil their new home to friends and family, Jody says the reactions to the doors has been amazing. "People think, 'wow these are fantastic' and, 'why has this not been done before?'" she says.

The final result has exceeded her expectations. "We've used the space well. We've got open plan living, which is great because it brings the outdoors in."

"It's funny to say that a door can improve your quality of life but it actually can."

When it came to renovating their 1765 Georgian home in Yorkshire, England, Charles and Nicky Sowter were no novices with 13 home renovations under their belts. The Sowters' goal with their latest project was to let light, fresh air and stunning views of the countryside into a home they could enjoy retirement with their family.

Nicky wanted to create seamless inside-outside living by opening the dining room and kitchen onto an outdoor area, and decided a four-panel integrated folding door was exactly what she needed. "We've just got this fantastic view from the kitchen through the doors down the valley... the sunsets are lovely, we never had that before, we just had tiny little windows," says Nicky.

The Sowters looked at 15 other door manufacturers before choosing an integrated door. Nicky says, "they stood out as the best of all of them." What caught her eye was the design. "We were very impressed with the sleek style," she says.

The vanishing screens and shades were another welcome feature, as she didn't want curtains. "It gives me privacy when I want it and if I don't, it just disappears into the cavity at the side, which is a brilliant design," says Nicky.

The doors have been much admired by guests. "Everybody who comes to the house comments on how nice they are. They're quite tactile, people tend to go to them and touch them and see how easily they open," she says.

For Nicky, the integrated doors have been key in delivering the outdoor connection she was after. "I think they've added a great deal. They frame the view, like a picture frame; you can't help but look out through the window," she says.

Nicky finally has a home she and her family can enjoy. "We'll never move. It's given us everything and more really. We just get a thrill every time we walk in. It just feels fabulous," she says.

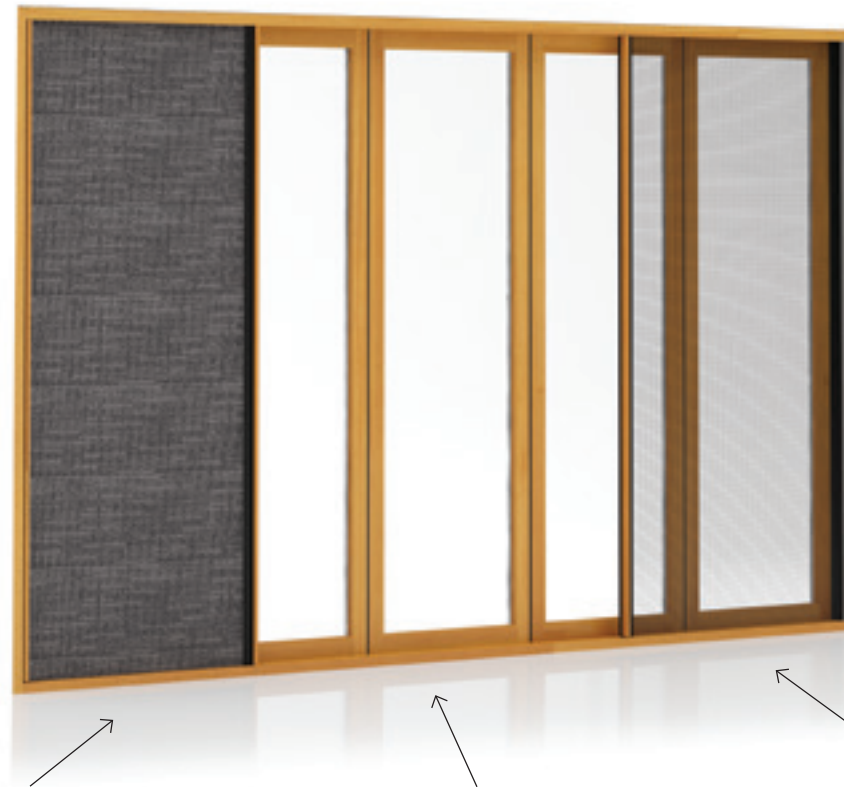

"It just disappears into the cavity at the side, which is a brilliant design."
